Dear members and friends,

We have been having a mild winter in the Pacific Northwest; some days have already felt like spring with February just beginning. My 60th birthday party, Nov. 5th, was a grand success at our local Pippy’s Café. Thank you all who attended and made it a festive event.

There were 25 people in attendance at Rohatsu Sesshin. Seishun as our Shika (host) managed the whole week with great skill. Daikan as our Dai-Tenzo (Chief Cook) assisted by Seiho and others made sure we were well fed. Ganko kept the pace going strong as our Jikijitsu (Time Keeper). Rinzan kept the beat as our Densu (Chant Leader). Sendo and Gavin kept us all lubricated as our Jishas (Tea Servers). Tendo ably attended my needs as Inji (Abbot Assistant). Josen kept the money flowing as our Fusu (Temple Accountant).

Gavin did Jukai (Precept – Dharma Name Ceremony) on the morning of the eighth day along with Carole Folsom-Hill who renewed her Jukai vows and formally joined the Chobo-Ji sangha. You can read more on this ceremony later in this issue.

We had another great year-end Toya Party on December 13th, with some particularly great skits by Kyosei and Rev. Paul Ashby. Our New Year’s day Chant – Bell-Ringing – Potluck was also a success, opening the sutras, dispelling delusions and refreshing our Great Vow to be openhearted in all our actions. Our community has been working closely recently with two organizations to help bring an openhearted response to this world of suffering: Patacara, assisting, once a month, in a Teen Feed to youth and young adults struggling with poverty and homelessness in South Seattle, and with the Faith Action Network which works with multi-faith communities to support the building of a more just, peaceful and sustainable world.

In the middle of January, I attended what I hope will become a yearly weeklong East Coast Rohatsu Sesshin at the new Blue Mountain Zendo in Andreas, PA. There were only 12 people in attendance, but what a strong group!

On January 31st we held an all sangha members meeting/council examining our practice environment, looking at what is working and what needs improvement. We had good attendance and received valuable input. Genko Ni-Osho will be summarizing what we have learned and will report to the wider sangha a summary of the thoughts and ideas generated.

In this issue of PMN you will find a listing for New Temple Posts beginning March 1st, a Board Report, a book review by Tendo, a Teisho transcription from Rohatsu Sesshin, and announcements for our upcoming Zen Intro Series, Building Skillful Means sessions for better communication, Spiritually-Based Gestalt Workshop, Domyo Burk Sensei’s upcoming visit, Spring Intensive, Spring Sesshin and our Annual Meeting April 12th, 11:30AM. It is my hope that you will enjoy these and the other offerings in this issue.

Josen and I are about to embark on a journey to Germany sponsored by Monika Jion Winkelman that will include a four-day sesshin; we will return mid-day on February 15th.

Several people had substantial breakthroughs into the depth of their True Nature. It was a very gratifying experience to be associated with such dedicated practitioners. Special thanks goes to Joriki Baker Osho for hosting this event.

Building Skillful Means

Last year Chobo-Ji began offering classes in the ten grave precepts as a prerequisite for those preparing for Jukai, but open to everyone to attend. These classes are held on two consecutive first Thursdays prior to each weeklong sesshin.

Our discussions have been pretty lively as we explore what it means to live in accord with the precepts, and the challenges and paradoxes that arise when we bring these to bear on our daily lives. It is clear that a strong intention – our Bodhisattva vow to care for all beings – requires skillful means to fully manifest in our lives, and so we must make an effort to learn these skills as well.

Because interpersonal communication is such a huge part of our life together, the abilities to speak and to listen deeply are two of the most important skills to practice. Beginning March 12 Chobo-Ji will be offering the opportunity to learn and practice some simple techniques to deepen our speaking and listening as part of the precept class series. We will work initially with the chapter on Listening in Norman Fischer’s book Taking Our Places, the same text being used for the precept classes.

The first two communications sessions will be led by Genko on Thursdays, March 12 and June 4, 7:30 to 9 pm, following the two-part precept classes in January and February, and in April and May.

Four Week Intro Series

Starting Tuesday, February 10 we will begin our Intro to Zen series. These four weeks will cover the basics of Zen meditation and our different ways of practicing mindfulness at Chobo-Ji. Topics include the posture, breathing and mechanics of Zen meditation, walking meditation, sutra chanting, our tea service, our meal service during week-long retreats (sesshins) and the use of koans (Zen parables) in Zen. The Complete Series Schedule is, 2/10, 2/17, 2/24 and we conclude this series on 3/3.

Participants will learn the blending of Eastern and Western psychology, to empower and educate themselves and others. (Some didactic materials and handouts will be provided to reinforce this learning.) The workshop is almost entirely experiential with exercises, art therapy, and Gestalt therapy practices.

You will also learn:
1. How to transform medical issues into powerful consultants.
2. How to deeply heal traumatic experiences.
3. How to guide couples to a breakthrough when each thinks the other is avoiding a serious problem.
4. Three powerful communication tools for discussing loaded subjects.

Contact Leonard at 206-322-5785 for more information.

Precept Class Series

The second meeting of our Precept Class facilitated by Genko Ni-Osho is scheduled for February 5 from 7:30 to 9 pm, at Chobo-Ji. We will be working with Norman Fischer's book Taking Our Places, (specifically the chapter on the precepts, which is about 40 pages long). Please bring materials for writing with you. If you are planning to take Jukai (formal acceptance of the Buddhist Precepts and path of practice) you must attend both classes of the series.

Of course drop-ins, whether beginners or senior students, are always welcome to these lively, informal discussions! The second series will be held on April 2nd and May 7th.

Qigong Practice

Chris Grabowski will be offering Qigong lessons for our sangha every other Saturday morning in the Chobo-Ji zendo starting February 21. (Naturally, this schedule will change during sesshins, as Chris gives evening lessons to all sesshin participants.) Chris teaches a deeply healing form of Qigong and will emphasize movements that are particularly beneficial for maintaining our wellbeing during the winter. Wear comfortable clothing.

Pay what you can afford to give (Chris wishes to share part of that dana with our temple).

Time: 9:30 to 10:30am.
Qigong dates prior to Spring Sesshin are: Feb 21 and March 7

Spring Intensive

An intensive covers roughly the same time frame as the traditional temple kessei period, beginning with the first sesshin for that season and ending with the second. It’s a time for concentrated study and practice. Chobo-Ji participants receive dokusan twice weekly between sesshins. Zenka says, “I’m deeply grateful for how supportive regularly doing the intensives are to my practice and highly recommend them.”

Chobo-Ji’s Spring Intensive will start March 8th with mini-sesshin, and conclude on June 26th. The purpose of the intensive is to give students the maximum opportunity to release entanglements by giving one’s self to the Dharma.

To participate one must commit to:

1) Zazen: Five hours of zazen per week, most, if not all, mini-sesshin, and attend two weeklong sesshins full-time (or nearly full-time) during the intensive. This is the most important ingredient of the intensive.

2) Do a minimum of five hours of samu (working meditation - gardening or cleaning) per week. Most of these hours can be in your own home, garden or community, but at least one should be at the temple.

3) Read one book of your choosing from the Chobo-Ji Bookstore and write a review of what you have read.

4) Keep a journal about your practice, at least one paragraph per week, and email a minimum of one paragraph per week each Friday to Genjo Osho on how the intensive is working on you.

5) Come to Dokusan at least once a week or if out of town try and schedule a Skype video call with Genjo Osho.

Ordination Fundraiser

Our Chobo-Ji resident, Jaye Seiho Morris, will be ordained as Unsui this spring. Congratulations to Jaye for the realization of his long-held dream, and congratulations to Chobo-Ji, also! Our Zen community will be deeply blessed by the ordination of such a dedicated and sincere follower of the way. Jaye recently moved his entire family to Seattle from the East Coast so that he could practice with us. It was a major change and commitment for them all. To help make Jaye’s dream a reality, he could use a hand from us.

The Sangha Relations Committee invites our practitioners to help Jaye to purchase his monk’s robes. Our fundraising goal is $1500. For those wishing to give, you can drop a check made out to Chobo-Ji in the donation bowl with Jaye’s name on the purpose line so we know it’s for his fundraiser, or follow this link to gofundme. Thank you for your support.

Gassho,
Sally Zenka

This is how it is sometimes, and we must collected in the course of our complex life. We invite a flood of old material that we’ve productive. Even a little spaciousness may feel very frustrating. Nevertheless, such a sesshin can be very beneficial. A sesshin after sesshin with only little glimpses of my head above water. A sesshin is an opportunity to waste it being a couch potato elsewhere in our life. If you’re flooded with work with the tail single heartedly until you can really grasp it as your own.

Mumon’s Poem

If it passes through, it falls into a ditch;
If it turns back, it is destroyed.
This tiny tail,
How extremely marvelous!

As this is the Fifth Day, we’ve passed over the peak of Rohatsu Sesshin, and most of us have had a chance to do some samadhi cruising, floating gently atop the waves of thought, feelings and sensations. In deep samadhi we are able to dip our keel into the deep, slow, still waters that we call “The Absolute,” and vocalize in Zen as “Mu.”

If we’re not yet in samadhi by this point, it’s probably because there’s a whole lot of composting that needs to be done, which is totally okay. Composting, combusting and releasing our inner turmoil is often a prerequisite to samadhi. If you’re making the effort to simply be here in this room, show up and stay with the breath, that’s all that is needed. If you’re flooded with material that’s complex and feels oppressive and annoying, please know I’ve often felt the same. Been there done that, sometimes sesshin after sesshin with only little glimpses of my head above water. A sesshin where so much time is spent composting and combusting can feel very frustrating. Nevertheless, such a sesshin can be very productive. Even a little spaciousness may invite a flood of old material that we’ve collected in the course of our complex life. This is how it is sometimes, and we must learn to be grateful for the opportunity to sit here using our breath as a kind of furnace to combust old material as it surfaces. It’s not pleasant, but it needs to be done. Use the breath to burn through or digest everything and anything that feels problematic. This work is its own kind of samadhi… Compost Samadhi (laughter).

Some people at sesshin will alternate between a vast spaciousness and Compost Samadhi. This, too, is okay, nothing wrong with it. Spacious Samadhi helps the artificial walls between conscious and unconscious, self and other, fall away. Then anything that’s been stuck in our unconscious may rise to the surface and then we may have to give over to Compost Samadhi. Alternating back and forth between these two kinds of samadhi may prove to be a very productive sesshin for cleaning out closets of old material.

It is possible to do a sesshin where you start to coast, rather than cruise. And I highly advise against coasting. That is really a waste of time and is very different from cruising. After a few days our bodies have learned how to do sesshin and it’s not a terrible burden anymore, we’ve gotten used to it. Now able to roll with the punches, we may let ourselves daydream and run movies in our head, saying, “Well, what’s the next movie I should play?” It’s like sitting on our couch at home with a DVD player deciding which DVD from our collection to start up; this is where we start to coast. (laughter) We have plenty of time to be a couch potato elsewhere in our life. Sesshin is too rare and precious an opportunity to waste it being a couch potato.

If you’re tempted to coast, make a concerted effort to step out of your cocoon of self. Switch channels from your movies or fantasies to one of the core koans such as, “What is this?”, “Who is asking?”, “Who is sitting here?” Initially when we ask, “Who’s sitting here?” we get some superficial answers like “This physical form,” or “This identity with a name.” or “This person who has such-and-such a family life with a specific family of origin, genetic background and personality type.” We are definitely selling ourselves short if we define ourselves by our vocation, rank, talents and limitations, successes and failures. These ways of defining our self are very boring (laughter) and limited. Now that you’re loosened up, in a more vulnerable and pliable condition, you can still be confused about who is sitting here, you’ll realize that you are much more than you ever thought. You are not just a person of a certain age, genetic composition and personal history. You are so much more. If it’s true that the greatest delusion is that we are separated individualities, then sitting here on the cushion it shouldn’t be too difficult to feel yourself seamless with the earth, even with the whole cosmos and beyond.

One good way to start a natural samadhi is to sit just like a mountain – be a mountain sitting on the cushion. That’s one reason robes are nice, whether ordained or lay robes, when worn they can help you feel like a mountain atop a cushion. There’s the foothills [pointing to his knees], here’s the peak [pointing to the top of his head]. A mountain is well planted and rooted in the earth, and seamless with the whole planet. If you can sit like that, the distinctions between you, a mountain and the whole earth become as transparent as the distinctions between your nose, face and the rest of your body. Sitting here like a mountain planted in the earth, it is not difficult to realize that you are seamless with the whole planet.
Don’t be a couch potato watching old movies. You’re welcome, as long as you keep one foot in this zendo, to fly over the whole universe, see its past, present and future. And who is it that can do that? You want to know what it’s like to be a bear, tiger, fox, orca or an eagle? Try it out! It’s not just imagining, but it begins there. Where do you think true insight comes from? Often it starts with a little imagination. When he was a young man, Einstein imagined what it would be like to ride a light beam, and from that came his insight about special relativity. You probably all saw the blue heron walking slowly through the Puget Sound, in cold, still waters. In slow kinhin (walking meditation) our slow steps are a lot like those of the blue heron, and it’s not as difficult as you might think to look through the heron’s eyes, fox’s eyes, orca’s eyes. Try it out!

One night. And you could say, he’s just imagining it. Well, try it for yourself, fly a little!
In Zen, we say from an Absolute perspective, there’s no life and death, there’s no coming and going, there’s nothing to do, nothing to attain, nowhere to go, it has no beginning or past, nothing is lacking and nothing is in excess. This is all true when looking at things from the Absolute perspective. Of course, if you look at the very same reality with a discriminating or relative lens, all these truths are turned upside down! Which way is up?

This is a koan, “Why can’t the tail pass through?” but many people have told me they hate it. If you say the tail can pass through, it falls into a ditch and is destroyed. If you say the Absolute can pass through, it is sullied. If the Absolute is something you can name, codify, describe or define it’s fallen into a ditch. And if it goes back it is destroyed. Deeply investigate this simile and you will likely arrive at several helpful insights into the nature of reality. But if you settle for not investigating, “It’s just a stupid question,” your own potential for deep realization is up.

If you can penetrate to the point of this Koan, open your Zen eye to it, and give a turning word to it, you will then be able to repay the four obligations above and help the three existences below. You can read the footnotes about the four obligations to the three existences below. You can read the footnotes about the four obligations to your parents and nation and such, and the three existences, desire, form and formlessness. If you are able to determine why the tail cannot pass through an open window and give a Turning Word, when your response is simple, obvious and confident, then you can better meet your obligation to the Great Vow, to have a caring, open heart towards all creatures great and small, animate and inanimate. In addition, you will find that you can live your life with more freedom, less worry, less feeling burdened, less needing to get ahead, less needing to be secure. So, it’s worth the investigation to come to your own realization of why the tail cannot pass through.

Someone said in Dokusan this morning that we should have Zen Improv Classes (laughter). That’s not a bad idea! Improvisation is needed to approach koans without dependence on words and letters and philosophical formulations. It’s not that philosophical understandings of the relative and the absolute nature of reality aren’t fun to play with, but we need our minds and hearts to be more flexible than just playing with philosophical baubles.

Checking koans are the subtle twists inside most cases. For example, “What is the gender of the Buffalo?” You might be tempted to say, “It’s either male or female,” and I’d say, “2% of the answer,” or you might say, “It’s both male and female,” and I’d say, “Better, about 25%.” You can say, “neither,” and I’d say, “Another 24%,” but you’d still be missing the big picture of this simile. If it’s neither male or female, nor both male and female, what is it? Quick!

Many times coming to dokusan you try something and my job is to eliminate it. (laughter) My biggest tool is negation. I might say, “Is that all?”, “Go sit some more,” “Putting that aside…” “Go a little deeper,” or just simply ring the bell. If you haven’t turned a koan over many times, you haven’t really looked at it thoroughly. We get confused because our discriminating mind is looking for the answer. There are always many ways to respond to the same koan, and often these responses on the surface can sound completely opposite to each other. After a while, as we begin to see the whole picture, our minds literally become indestructible! Now when you apply that this teeny tail! How extremely marvelous! A Zen Master said, “This teeny tail, you may describe it but in vain; picture it but to no avail. When the world collapses, It is indestructible!” Now when you apply that Winter Board Report

by Scott Ishin Stolnack
President, Chobo-Ji Trustees

Here is a short list of some of the topics the Chobo-ji Board has been processing:

Clergy statement. The Board received a letter from Michael Hull objecting to our statement in the last issue of Plum Mountain News characterizing his actions as misconduct. The Board and the Ethics & Reconciliation Committee stand by our statement. Yet the situation has made us realize that we do not have a grievance procedure in place to make sure people have an opportunity to be heard if they feel wronged by our decisions. The Board has asked the Ethics and Reconciliation committee to research and recommend a grievance procedure. When the Board approves a new procedure and puts it in place, we will offer Michael a chance to use it.

Prison ministry. The Board has been working with Genko Ni-Osho to process a request from a formerly incarcerated sex offender to practice at Chobo-ji. There are no immediate plans to bring former offenders to Chobo-ji. Genko and volunteers from Chobo-ji and other Buddhist groups are arranging an alternate offsite practice location.

Deepening practice at Chobo-ji. Our first priority as a Board is to support a safe and wholesome practice for our sangha. To support this priority, Chobo-Ji held a Community Council at the Zendo on January 31. The purpose of this Council was to explore how we can hold and strengthen a nurturing and wholesome community. A number of Board members were present, and the meeting was very useful and positive. We will process what we heard and report back to you. If you have thoughts on this matter please let us know – talk to me, another Board member, Genjo or Genko.

Membership. Our goal is to have a broad and engaged membership. A broad membership brings in ideas and energy and strengthens our sense of community, and financially supports the Practice Center. The Board recently approved an update to our bylaws to more clearly articulate our membership process. Stay tuned for more information coming soon.

Rohatsu at Camp Indianola. The operators of Camp Indianola recently modified their fee structure, which will mean a very large increase in the cost of renting our usual buildings for Rohatsu sesshin. After surveying the membership and after much thought and debate, the Board voted to continue renting the same buildings for Rohatsu 2015, with fundraising and a fee increase to offset the higher charges. Much went into this decision. During the coming year we will work on fundraising and creating an appropriate fee structure, as well as exploring a path forward for a venue for future Rohatsus.

Annual meeting. The Chobo-ji annual members’ meeting is Sunday, April 12, at 11:30 am after the mini-sesshin. At this meeting the members hear an update on the Board’s work and elect the Board of Trustees. Trustees are on two-year terms: about half of us are up for re-election this year. We hope you can attend.

Center finances. At our January meeting the Board reviewed our financial status for 2014 and passed a budget for 2015. The Center ended 2014 in good financial health, with a positive cash flow. We have a solid budget for 2015 and continue to operate within our means. Thank you to all who support the good work of Chobo-ji.

Shobogenzo Reading Group

January 29th was the initial meeting for the Shobogenzo reading group. You will find upcoming topics some Thursdays over the course of the year in the temple Google calendar and in the weekly email bulletin. Please join as you can in exploring this comprehensive brilliant text by Zen Master Dogen.
Endless Vow

Review by Robert Tendo Kirkpatrick

In the United States and also in China, all we can do is conduct this great sesshin [Rohatsu]. This, I believe, is the essential of essentials. Zazen, kinhin, zazen, kinhin. " (p.87)

It snowed the night before Rohatsu but, as seems to so often happen here in Seattle, that weather system moved right through and it became clear and cold for most of next week. The traces of snow that remained by nightfall froze and persisted throughout that week which had the byproduct of causing one to be extra mindful when walking out of doors. Rohatsu was held at a retreat center right on the Puget Sound which this week was calm with only barely audible gentle swells disturbing its surface. Across the water and a fair piece of the mainland the Cascade Mountains, pure with fresh snow, provided a broken horizon for the cold rays of the late autumn sun to illuminate. A few days into sesshin, during outdoor kinhin under the icy blue sky, I recalled the following haiku by Sōen Nakagawa:

Clearness! sky and water
reflecting my heart (p.52)

I had brought Endless Vow: The Zen Path of Sōen Nakagawa, with me to Rohatsu to read during spare moments. There weren’t too many of these, but every so often something would strike me and I’d flip through the book for a corresponding passage or poem almost like a capping phrase to that event. The book was fresh in my mind as it was my text for the Autumn Kessei which I had begun reading during Autumn Sesshin. It seemed fitting to return to it during Rohatsu and just as in the previous sesshin moments in my practice and in the life and poems of Sōen Nakagawa would momentarily align.

Endless Vow is a collection of excerpts from Sōen Nakagawa’s journals, letters and published poems and there are quite a few long gaps when either he wasn’t writing or the material had been published elsewhere. The picture it gives is fragmentary and very personal: clearly not something he’d written with publication in mind. The loose strands are threaded together by a long biographical introduction from Eido Shimano, who was a dharma heir of Sōen Roshi. Shimano paints a picture of an introverted loner driven to practice who chaffed against the rigidity of the Japanese monastery system. In his biographical sketch Eido Shimano writes:

Sōen Roshi’s independent spirit, creativity, and aesthetic sensitivity were extremely attractive to me as a young monk, and I fell in love with him, as did his American students. (p.21)

In America, we delighted in calling him untamed; in Japan, they called him untrained, and some turned away from him;” (p.24)

I connected strongly with Sōen Roshi’s reverence for the poet-monks of Japan, his many solitary retreats, his penchant for travel and his devotion to Bassui. I had just this summer past spent two months bicycling in the mountains of the Cascades and Sierras sitting zazen at sunrise and sunset and contemplating the sayings of Bassui presented in Mud & Water. Like Sōen Roshi the wandering poet-monks are a profound influence on myself and while we travel in different worlds the nature of my travelling has brought me closer to them and reading them has influenced my travels. I write my own minimal poems on my wanderings, because I find in a few words a way to express things that I can’t otherwise say.

Endless is my vow
under the azure sky
boundless autumn (p.70)

But if there really is one aspect of Sōen Roshi’s character that defined his life it was his dedication as manifested through his many vows. In contrast to his unconventional, rebellious and wild nature that seems to reinforce that, if not exclusively American, particularly American emphasis on individuality, vows instead constrain one’s actions. “On October 3rd [1931] I made a vow to live on one meal a day, following the Buddhist scripture. This has resulted in a new-day clarity and expansiveness in my life.” (1, p.52) This was an additional restriction to an earlier vow he had made to only eat nuts, seeds and raw vegetables. Placing these sorts of constraints upon his life, along with other such vows as walking barefoot around a mountain, chanting a text some large number of times and actively encouraging and praising others in such dramatic life-modifying ways, stands in contrast to romantic notions of the rebellious wanderer. As I took Jukai during Autumn Sesshin, which is a public vow that we Western followers of the way make, I spent much time contemplating vows and how serious of a matter are they. How many of us take these vows in the spirit that Sōen Roshi did?

Vow fulfilled
I enter the disk of the sun
this autumn day (p.128)

Another of Sōen Roshi’s great vows was to spread the Dharma around the world and especially to establish an International Zendo, a “place where true Dharma friends can gather from all over the world, a place not limited to just Buddhism or Zen” (1, p.63). By the late 1960s, with related Zendos in Hawai’i, Jerusalem, New York City, London, Cairo and International Dai Bosatsu Zendo Kongo-Ji in upstate New York he had fulfilled this vow. Much of his later years had been spent in this effort. This great vow of Sōen Roshi’s through which he worked so hard planting seeds is truly an endless vow. The seeds must be spread but then they must be nurtured. Sit after sit I pondered this koan, coming to the understanding that while I may not have the missionary zeal of Sōen Roshi, I am compelled to nurture it lest it grow fallow. And at this moment of Zen in the West nurturing is perhaps what is truly needed. In January 1973 one month before I was born he wrote:

Great bodhisattvas small bodhisattvas together begin the Ox Year (p.137)

Sōen Roshi’s later days were marked by a head injury and increasing isolation. His journals became equally terse with some years only containing an entry regarding the year’s poetic theme and his attempt to realize it. “Sōen Roshi always said he admired “plain, natural and direct behavior,” but he was such a complicated, indirect, and convoluted person.” (p.45) This comment from Eido Shimano is perhaps the most vital lesson to be found herein. Sōen Nakagawa was a Zen Master in the contemporary era and his complicated nature was right here for everyone to see; the rough edges hadn’t been smoothed away by time as with the ancient masters. This renders him approachable, his experiences attainable. Their flaws are a gift of the contemporary masters, allowing us to see ourselves as imperfect, complicated, and multifaceted as we are, in them.

Autumn light fills the room vacancy (p.111)

On the sixth day of Autumn sesshin I felt strangely joyous and filled with light during the later morning sits. There was a beam of sunlight coming in behind the altar that caught the incense smoke which was swirling in these absolutely mystical eddies. I was completely transfixed by this until the complex edges (where the fascinating bits always are) drifted away and it was just smoke particles dancing in the light.

Jukai Ceremonies

On the morning of Dec. 7th, 2014, the final day of Rohatsu Sesshin, Carole Folsom-Hill and Gavin Mackay formally accepted the Buddhist precepts and received a Dharma Name. Carole has had twenty-year association with Genjo, but it was during a two year chaplaincy training program directed by Roshi Joan Halifax that she first did Jukai and received the Dharma Name Chikyo. She writes:

Chikyo, my current dharma name, means “mirror of wisdom.” It reminds and motivates me to realize that I am a mirror for others to discover their wisdom and honors my own wisdom manifested in this chosen path. I would like to retain this dharma name also as a reminder of my connection to the Prajna Mountain Order and the Zen Peacemaker Order. An addition to the dharma name symbolizes for me the coming together of the Soto and Rinzai traditions, both of which hold for me significance in my journey.

Carole’s new Dharma Name is Mu-Chi-Kyo: Empty Wise Mirror.

Gavin began practicing Zen a few years back. He writes:

I came to Zen because I needed help. I had been suffering from multiple physical ailments that impeded my daily activities… I met doctor after doctor but to no avail… Now that we have the sob story out of the way let’s get to the success story! I’m still here and getting better slowly but surely. Even though I’ve had great help from surgeons and physical therapists I would not have made it this far without Zen. Not only is mindfulness of my body integral to my physical recovery, Zen has also helped me let go of basing my identity on position or affiliation and helped me reconnect with the light-hearted, open, more adventurous me…

Sometimes when I’m feeling rather clear and I read the Four Great Vows I really feel like “Yeah that’s it! You hit the nail on the head there.” But I’m not clear all the time (more like most of the time) and during those times the ten grave precepts point me in the right direction… One night I was returning home after a lovely day of Sesshin and was struck by the thought, “Oh geez! Just because I’ve left the Zendo doesn’t mean I have to leave my breath. If I’m busting my butt, working to being a kinder, open, loving being then this should be a practice that I’m engaged in at all moments of my waking life.” Taking the precepts is another way I can engage in this practice. I look forward to exploring them and watching the ways in which they will change my relationship with myself and of those around me.

As for Rinzai Zen I really love the writings in the Rinzairoku. There was one chapter I read a while ago that I think went something to the effect of “If you’re not speaking from your experience then all your words will reek of shit as soon as they leave your mouth.” How wonderful! I also love the no fluff of Rinzai. He works so hard to cut any unnecessary words that might confuse or misdirect whoever is listening and tries to cut to the heart of the matter as directly as he can…

Finally taking Jukai will not only allow me to formally vow to the precepts but also give me a chance to give back and commit to the Dharma, teacher, and sangha that I have benefited from so very much.

Gavin gave me the following hints about a possible Dharma Name. He said that he always has loved hiking mountain trails, “Then when you reach the top your perspective changes. Even if you can see something familiar down below, your relationship with it has changed and it gets swallowed up in the vastness of the wider view.” He also spoke to me about a hawk, “Today on my walk there were many hawks gliding effortlessly above long forgotten temple ruins giving a keen eye to everything below. Before I felt that hawk would be too cool for me! I certainly don’t feel hawkish but it’s something I’ve been aspiring to. For so long I’ve felt dull and in need of sharpening. Zazen has and will sharpen me more.”

Gavin’s new Dharma Name is O-Zan: Hawk Mountain.

Jukai candidates need to petition in writing at least one month prior to the ceremony. Jukai candidates usually have attended regular zazen at Chobo-Ji for a minimum of six months (including at least two week-long sesshins), must be regular financial supporters of the temple, and feel ready to give themselves to the Three Treasures (Buddha, Dharma & Sangha).
